Our sellers reflections - Upper Hall, Manaton

The house was first listed in 1955 and is classified as Grade I; the adjacent barn is listed as Grade II. Our family restored the building over three years from 1981 to 1983 to reinstate it as close as possible to its original interior layout, with adjustments to allow for modern living conditions and facilities. Upon completion, the architects (Harrison-Sutton) entered the project for the then existing Henley Award given jointly by the CLA, CPRE, and CPRW. It won the Southern region award for the restoration of a derelict 15th-century farmhouse.

As a whole, the building represents, on a small scale, a residence for a gentleman of considerable wealth. A person prepared to invest substantial funds and energy to a state-of-the-art luxurious interior. Facilities include Garderobe (indoor toilet) with its own door, an indoor laver (sink) with an out shot to the rear (southwest) gable end, and a raised dais before a grand fireplace (we were allowed to increase depth of the dais to better separate the area from what is now the kitchen). Additionally, a screen above which a sleeping platform was constructed. Building to this standard involved skilled masons with an abundance of suitable stone. Blacksmiths were needed keep the masons' tools sharp and hardened to cope with facing the large granite blocks. Of course, there would have been joiners and at least one woodcarver to create the cusped window frame and its associated decorations. The main truss timbers would have been imported from elsewhere, as Dartmoor scrub oaks would not have produced such large curved (radiused) sections suitable for conversion.

It should be noted that we are indebted to a previous owner who had the wit and foresight to retain many of the medieval timbers, trusses, door frames, and not least the six-light window frame still in place some 600-700 years later.
